The Ultimate Guide to report Types

Understanding how to create data sets in Salesforce is key to creating accurate reports. The data you and your users want to report on is not always stored in records from a single object. Many times you will need to join data together from various objects to create meaningful reports. But with so many ways to join data together, it's crucial to know when to use each method.

This presentation, given by Evan Ponter, was made available on the Salesforce Videos website: <https://www.salesforce.com/video/1770827/>

And also associated blog post, and trailheads: <https://admin.salesforce.com/ultimate-guide-report-types>

The 40-minute video is a nice introduction if you need information about how to build reports, why some data isn't showing up, and how to simplify your user's lives.

Name	Link	Description
Salesforce Reporting Workbook	Click here	This workbook is deprecated and has been for some time. However, if you have no experience at all with reports and dashboards, it shows you the general outline of what is possible and has some nice examples. Don't consider this as the end-all be-all but it can be a nice introduction.
LEX Reports & Dashboard Trailheads	Click here	The trailhead about reports & dashboards. The standard entry point if you haven't done it.
Cross-Filters definition and video	Click here	A quick intro video of how to have a report of companies with or without contacts using Cross Filters. Is a simple solution to an oft-encountered pain point that some people solve with the Power of One.
Power of One	Click here	Some people misuse it where a Cross Filter would work better, but it is still a staple of Salesforce reporting. PoO allows you to count unique occurrences of a record within a grouped record. Better explained in the link.

Date Literals

When creating a report or a list view, you sometimes need to filter based on a dynamic value. Say you want the records of last week for example. In a report, you could do that with the global filter on top of the reporting engine. But say you want Opportunities closed between the Last month and the Last week ?

Well that's when Date Literals come in.
